COLORS HAVE FLOWN FROM POLE SINCE 1913

From Lansing State Journal, Sept. 6
Like a loyal soldier, standing at post until the last, the old flagstaff which has stood at brigade headquarters, Camp Grayling, since the camp's inception, collapsed at 7:30 o'clock Aug. 20 as the last unit broke camp and the camp flag was hauled down for the last time in the 1926 training period.

The old pole has flown the nation's colors over many Michigan camps. It has done duty at the old Manistee, Ludington camps in the old days of the Michigan National Guard and was transferred to the Grayling reservation camp back in 1913. The great pole, nearly 70 feet in height, was cut near Manistee by Captain William Case and set up at the old Manistee military training grounds.

The pole had no butt supports like the modern pole but carried its own weight and stood on its own feet. Ten feet of the tree was buried in the ground. When a halyard went wrong it was necessary to climb the pole as it could not be taken down as can the modern flag staffs.

The old pole flew the nation's colors when the men went to Camp Grayling during the world war, and previous to the trek to the Mexican border. Since 1913 it has stood straight and tall near brigade headquarters, flying the colors during the camp schedule and remaining firm and loyal on duty during the long cold winters which bury the state reservation in snow.

This year the aged soldier stood up to duty as had been its custom for years. Although the elements had tormented it, the old pole took the buffets year in and year out. Age, however, which incapacitates even the staunchest soldier and weakens his arm though not his spirit, compelled the old pole to surrender. But it carried the colors to the last and surrendered to time only the fine of all and still a foe unconquerable.

TOWNSHIP BOARD BEAUTIFYING CEMETERY

Great credit is due the members of the preceding township board of Grayling for the fine improvements made in the appearance of the cemetery. The place has never been so attractive as it is at the present time. There are eight flower beds in full bloom right at this time—geraniums and quantities of multi-colored asters and other flowers. It will pay the people to take a drive to the cemetery at this time to enjoy the flowers. And also in general the cemetery has been undergoing a gradual but permanent improvement. The board members who have been active in working for the improvement and beauty of the cemetery are Supervisor A. J. Nelson, ex-Clerk Alfred Hanson, Justices Ralph Hannan and C. P. Schumann, and the present clerk who assumed the duties last spring, C. O. McCullough. No funds have ever been raised for cemetery purposes, the board having to depend for revenue upon money received from the sale of lots and money taken from the contingent fund. Next spring a specific cemetery fund should be raised so that the splendid work that is now being done may be continued. Our cemetery should be one of the prettiest places in the community. We hope that many will drive into the cemetery and note the many improvements and the flowers. Do so at the first opportunity before frosts destroy the plants.

ANOTHER VIEW OF IT

From the Lansing Capitol News
Herb Baker of Cheboygan and John Smith, mayor of Detroit were members of the State Senate when the State Administrative Board bill was passed. They had served for some time in the State Legislature. They knew the condition of State affairs. They knew that over a period of years a deficit had been piling up until it was near the point of $5,000,000. They knew that no provision had been made for retiring approximately $80,000,000 worth of bonds voted by the people of the state.

In common with other members of the Legislature they were eager to hear what the new Governor, Alex. Groesbeck, would say in his message to the Legislature. When his message came it was not like the ordinary message. Groesbeck did not content himself with pointing out evils. He suggested remedies. Among other things he had the temerity to suggest a tax on corporations for the purpose of raising money to rebuild our state institutions without adding to the tax on homes and personal property. Among other things he suggested a State Administrative Board to replace some 70 commissions and boards, an organization that would administer the business of the state in the same efficient manner common to business institutions. The plan fixed responsibility directly upon the elective officers of the state.

Both Smith and Baker as state senators gave whole hearted support to the administrative board plan. They voted for it and worked for it. They had a sincere desire to do something for the government and people of Michigan. The bill was passed. In 1922 the Democrats seized upon the administrative board as an issue and were whipped to a standstill. The next election, 1924, Baker felt the urge of ambition and ran for Governor. He picked up the issue that the Democrats had used because there was no concrete administrative evil that he could attack. He urged no specific changes in the plan. He con-

Our Plain Duty

The weekly press of Michigan is already engaged in many laudable activities, chief of which are fire prevention, rebuilding the rural church and school, making farm environments more pleasing, better law enforcement, loyalty to home communities and many other worth-while things that make for better citizenship and better living conditions. On every public question of importance we are always to be found with our feet on the ground battling for the things that is to the honor and endurance of the Republic.

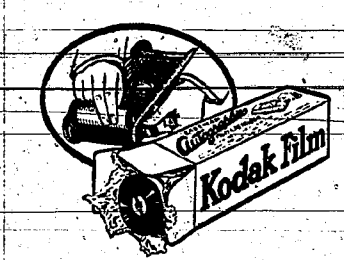

That is why we should be vitally interested in everything everybody with the rights of franchise to exercise that privilege next Tuesday. There is no doubt about it, indifference is one of the gravest dangers besetting democratic self government. The ignorant, the indifferent, the apathetic voter is a danger to the state. We must see that he will not only vote, but will vote intelligently and for the good of the state. Do your duty as an American citizen by going to the polls next Tuesday and registering a free man's choice.

Yours sincerely,
O. P. SCHUMANN.

tented himself with attacking it as an autocratic instrument of government. Against the issue and the opponents of business-like government were routed.

In 1926 John Smith, now mayor of Detroit and reaching out with his ambition to higher places, opened the campaign for Fred Green, of Ionia. Like Baker he too repudiated his vote on the Administrative Board bill and attacked the system. Neither of these gentlemen ever explained to the people that they once had supported it. The truth of the whole campaign may be found in the fact that the opponents of the Governor do not object to the Administrative Board or any other part of the state government. The only issue is whether or not the system should be kept. The men who were in office by the people, shall be returned to places of power in our state government.

ELMER DEWEY BARBER

Elmer Dewey Barber, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Barber of Fredrick, passed away at Receiving hospital, Detroit, Sunday, August 29th, after a two weeks illness. The young man took ill on August 14 and was taken to Receiving hospital, where he underwent an operation for ruptured gastric ulcer of the stomach. He seemed to be improving until the fifth day following the operation when peritonitis developed, which he successfully combated and was well on way to recovery when septic colon poisoning set in which caused his death. Mr. Barber was called to his son's bedside and remained with him until his death. Also Edward V. Barber of Chicago Heights was with his father for several days preceding the young man's death. He was given every comfort, and Mr. Barber speaks in the highest praise of the doctors, nurses and of Receiving hospital.

The remains were brought to Fredrick Monday morning of last week and the funeral held Wednesday afternoon, and was attended by a large congregation of friends. Rev. Crandall of the M. P. church conducted the services and a choir of several voices rendered several beautiful hymns. The remains were laid to rest in the Fredrick cemetery.

Elmer D. Barber was born in Fredrick, June 17, 1899, where his boyhood was spent. He was united in marriage on March 3, 1916, to Miss Leona Oliver at West Branch. The young couple made Grayling their residence until 1922 when they moved to Detroit, where Mr. Barber plied his trade of glass cutter for the Ford Motor company and remained in their employ until several months ago when he accepted a position at the Hudson-Motor plant, where he was employed at the time he was taken ill. He was a very likable young man and made friends wherever he went. His wife, parents,

Last Friday evening two full loads drove to Fredrick, to call on Mrs. Lampke, nee Alice Brown. Mrs. Kramer suffered a dislocation of the shoulder, and several others were somewhat bruised and all badly shaken up, but as they came home safely toward Michigan they voted it a very enjoyable trip.

The two young men who took a sailboat for a spin on Portage Lake had better practice on a scow. VOLE NEXT TUESDAY

It will take more than a thin and flimsy excuse to remove the suspicion that one is lacking in the finer qualities of citizenship if they fail to cast their vote at the primaries next Tuesday, September 14th. The man or woman who never loses an opportunity to advance their claim to pure Americanism, and then because it happens to be a rainy day or they are too busy, should realize that the greatest danger to this Republic today is not the Communist, but the one who stays away from the voting booth and thereby permits a government by minorities.

We are coming to the closing hours of a primary campaign that has been out in the open for over four months, and which has been carried to every part of the state. The issues of the present campaign have been clearly defined and the field limited to two candidates so that for the first time a majority vote will be cast in favor of a single candidate.

For the sake of the primary and the cause of good government in Michigan the present battle should be settled in a decisive manner by an overwhelming vote, and not by a small percentage of those entitled to the rights of franchise. You would shoulder a gun and die in the defense of your country, if need be; then show your patriotic love by the simple matter of going to the polls next Tuesday. You will be a better citizen by doing this—and your friends and neighbors will not fail to recognize that fact.

WE ARE quite in sympathy with a resolution recently adopted by the Izak Walton League of Gaylord, favoring a resident anglers' license.

The resolution favors a fisherman's license for resident fishermen, the funds raised in this way to be used to buy up the river frontage by the state and turned over to the people. It was pointed out that land owners could not be expected to continue to pay taxes on land for which they could receive no return, and as the state was closing many of the trout streams for spawning grounds, the farmers were not even permitted to fish on their own property, though paying taxes on the streams, as most of those closed are not meandered. That it was absolutely necessary to close these streams if trout were to be propagated, but that the people who did the fishing should be made to help bear the expense.

What has become of the old-fashioned politician who urged the adoption of the primary system so the poor candidate would have a chance? It's no use trying to kid yourself into thinking you are still young when you have to put double lenses into your spectacle frames.

Michigan Happenings

A federal statement shows that Illinois was the greatest market of Michigan apples in the 1925-26 shipping season taking 2,131 out of the 6,000 cars shipped out of the state. The shipments outside of the state in 1925-26 season were 3,443, and in the previous season 9,226. Michigan consumed 1,016 carloads, of which 423 were taken by Detroit. Detroit also secured a large part of its apples by truck. Fennville led in the total number of cars shipped, with 459. Ludington, with 369 cars, was second.

LYDIA of the PINES By HONORE WILLIS

The author of "Still Jim," "The Heart of the Desert" and other splendid American stories, has outdone all previous efforts in her creation of Lydia, one of the most appealing figures in our distinctively American fiction. A novel to be read eagerly for its plot alone, it contains so much to think about and talk about that no brief description suffices. One must read it to appreciate it. The reading will surely yield a vast amount of pleasure.

LYDIA of the Pines

BY HONORE WILLISIE
COPYRIGHT BY FREDERICK A. STOKES CO.

From her long service as editor of the Delineator, a magazine for women, it was assumed that Mrs. Willisie would know what women liked to read. It was not until she began writing novels, largely of western American life, that it was discovered that she both knew and could write. Stories that had a strong appeal to men, there are two reasons for her success in striking masculine preference. The first is in the fact that the men she puts in her books—the heroes—are never too heroically brave or good to be possible—just regular men. The second is that the heroines she depicts are men's sort of girls. They are not too perfect, too virtuous, too ideal. They are very keen about. She thus makes the distinction of having a wide and loyal circle of readers among the members of both sexes.

Her story, "Lydia of the Pines," is largely a depiction of a very charming young woman, sweet and appealing in every way, who is the daughter of a troubadour. It will be recalled that the troubadour did not prevent our ancestors from despoiling the Indians of their lands and otherwise giving the red men rather a raw deal; and that very inconsistency between creed and action has a strong bearing on this story. New Englanders and Indians figure in it again, the former as settlers and residents of a modern community in one story, the latter as pitifully starved, diseased and half-degenerated races struggling to hang onto certain reservation lands which the white man also wants.

Lydia's conscience was even tougher than that of the troubadour. One of her friends, for instance, who had been a hunter, she had inherited, she could not make the compromise with principle which her best friends and even her own father were willing to make. In this story of a girl with the average characteristics of her sex—love of dress, money, culture, and worldly comfort—there is a desire for the ordinary admiration—there was still something of the stuff that makes martyrs. It is a fine picture of the best in human nature, which is the character and its influence upon all the characters with which it came in contact. It is a refreshing study. And it is all told without any excess of sentimentality, any prancing or any exaggeration. Both saint and sinner loved Lydia, and so will you whether you are one or the other or a mixture of both.

CHAPTER I

The Toy Balloon

There is a state in the north Mississippi valley unexcelled for its quiet beauty. To the casual traveler there may be a certain monotony in the unending miles of rolling green hills, stretching on and on into distant, pale skies. But the native of the state knows that the monotony is only seeming.

He knows that the green hills shelter in their gentle valleys many placid lakes. Some of them shallow and bordered with wild rice. Some are concealed deep in the hollow or cupping bluffs. Some are carefully accented in virgin pine woods. From the train these places are little suspected. Fire and the axe have long since destroyed any trace of their growth along the railway.

In summer the whole great state is a wonderful array of color. Wide wheat lands of a delicate yellowish green sweep mile on mile till brought to pause by the black green of the woods.

An old state, as we measure things out of New England, settled by New Englanders during the first great emigration after the War of 1812. Its capital, Lake City, lays claim to almost a century of existence. Lying among the hills in the northern part of the state, it contains both the state capitol and the state university. Of its thirty thousand inhabitants, five thousand are students and another five thousand are state legislators and state employees.

A quiet town, Lake City, with an atmosphere that might well belong to New England—beauty, culture, leisure, are its hallmarks.

Fifteen years ago half a mile inland from the lake was an empty block that once had been a farm pasture. Three fine old oaks stood with tops together in the center of the block. The grass was still firm and green and thick in the ancient pasture, except for narrow trails worn by children's feet. To the initiated each tree told its own story. There was a hollow square that formed the base ball diamond. There was a straight, short, cut that led to the little cross-grown spring. There were the parallel lines for "Come-Come Pull Away," and there were numerous bald spots, the center of little radiating trails where, in the fall, each group of children had its complicated roasting oven in which potatoes and "weenies" were cooked.

On one August afternoon the pasture seemed deserted. It was circus day and the children of the surrounding blocks had all by one method or another won admission to the big tent on the hill east of the town.

Yet not quite all the children. For under one of the oak trees was a baby carriage in which a little girl of two lay fast asleep. And far above her, perched lightly but firmly in a swinging fork of the oak, was a long-legged girl of twelve. She sat where she could peer easily down on her small sleeping sister, yet high enough to be completely hidden from casual view. She was a thin youngster, with short curling hair of a dusty yellow. The curly hair did not hide the fine square head, a noble head for so small a girl, set well on the little square shoulders. Her eyes were blue and black lashed.

Her nose was straight, her mouth large, her chin square and her little jaw line long and pronounced. She wore a soiled sailor suit of blue gaiters. Caught in the crotch of two opposite branches was a doll almost as large as the sleeping child below. It was a queer, old-fashioned doll, with a huge china head that displayed brilliant black hair and eyes as blue as those of her little mistress. The doll wore a clumsily made sailor suit of blue calico, which evidently had been washed recently, but not ironed. It is necessary to meet the doll properly, for she was an intimate and important member of the little girl's family. Her name was Florence Dombey.

A battered red book lay in Florence Dombey's lap. It was called, "With Clive in India." It was written by G. A. Henry and told of the marvelous and hairbreadth adventures of an English lad in an Indian campaign. Florence Dombey's attention, however, was not on the book. It was riveted, hectically, on her mistress, who, with her tongue caught between her lips, was deftly whittling a cigar-box cover into doll furniture, of a scale so tiny that even had Florence Dombey had a doll of her own, it could not have hoped to use the furniture.

The little furniture maker suddenly closed the knife sharply. "Durn it! I've cut myself again," she said. She dropped the knife down the neck of her blouse and began to suck her finger. "Here, let me have Henry, Florence Dombey. Don't try to pig it all the time. You know I don't get hardly any time to read."

The furniture and the remains of the cigar-box cover followed the knife into her blouse and she opened the book. But before she had begun to read there was a sleepy little call from below.

"Yes, baby," called the child. "Here's Lydia, up in the tree! Watch me, dearie! See me come down. Here comes Florence Dombey drat!" With some difficulty the book followed the knife and the furniture into the blouse. Florence Dombey, being hastily inverted, showed a length of light marlin cord wrapped about her cotton legs.

"Here she comes, baby! Catch now for Lydia!"

The baby below, a tiny plump replica of Lydia, sat up with a gurgle of delight and held up her arms as Florence Dombey, dangling unhappily, upside down, on the end of the marlin cord, was lowered carefully into the perambulator.

"And here I come. Watch me, baby!"

With a swing light and agile as a young monkey, Lydia let herself down, landing with a spring of which an acrobat might have boasted, beside the perambulator.

"There, sweetness!"—kissing the baby—"first we'll sit Florence Dombey, then we'll start for home."

"Florence, home wiv baby?"

"Yes, it's getting near supper time," Lydia, tucked the still hectically staring doll in beside her small sister, turned the perambulator around and ran it along one of the little paths to the sidewalk.

At the crossing she met a small girl of her own age, who carried a toy balloon, and a popcorn ball.

"Hello, Lydia!" she cried. "It was a perfectly lovely circus!"

"Was it?" cried Lydia, with an indifferent voice that something in her blue eyes denied. "Well, I had to take care of little Patience!"

"Huh!" shrilled the little girl, "old Lissie would have done that. I think your father's mean not to give you the money."

Lydia's red cheeks went still redder. "My father's got plenty of money," she began fiercely. Here the baby interrupted.

"Baby love pritty. Baby love—" she held out two beseeching dimpled hands toward the red balloon.

"Patience, you can't have it," cried Lydia. "It'll make you rummy olden. I'll buy you one when you're older."

The black-eyed child, holding the red balloon, suddenly kissed little Patience, who was the pet of all the children in the neighborhood, and put the string of her balloon into the dimpled hand. "I had the circus— you can have the balloon," she said. Lydia looked at the girl and held it out to the owner, a chubby, red-faced, curly-haired child, who said, "We're in charity, charity, Margery," she said. "I'll get Patience a balloon."

"You're an awful liar and a cruel beast, Lydia!" cried Margery. She snatched the string and tied it about the baby's wrist. "You know you can't buy her one and you know she'll cry herself sick for one, now she's seen mine, and I guess I love her as much as you do."

Lydia looked from the cherub in the perambulator, cowering ecstatically over the red bubble that tugged at her wrist, to the defiant Margery. "I'll let her have it, Margery," she said reluctantly. "I'll make you a doll's high chair."

All right," said Margery, merrily. "Face tag! So long!" Lydia ran the perambulator along the board walk. The street was macadamized and bordered with thirty maple trees. Back of the maple trees were frame houses, of cheap and standard construction. Before one of these Lydia paused. It was a dingy brown house, of the type known as "story and a half."

Lydia opened the gate in the picket fence and tugged the perambulator through and up to the porch. "There, baby mine, shall Lydia take you in for your supper?"

"Supper," cooed little Patience, lifting her arms.

Lydia lifted her to the porch with surprising ease. The little two-year-old should have been no light weight for the little mother of twelve. She stood on the porch watching Lydia arrange Florence Dombey in her place in the perambulator. The red balloon tugged at her wrist, her little white dress blowing in the summer breeze, she finally grew impatient of Lydia's attentions to Florence Dombey.

"Baby out now," she cried with a stamp of her small foot.

Lydia laughed. She ran up the steps, took the baby's hand and led her through the entry into a square little room, evidently the parlor of the house. It was dusty and disorderly.

Lydia disgorged the contents of her blouse upon the desk, then followed little Patience into the next room. This was larger than the first and was evidently the dining room and sitting room.

A short, stout old woman was setting the table. She had iron gray hair. Her face was a broad wreath of wrinkles, surrounding a bespectacled black eye and a thin mouth that never quite concealed a very white and handsome set of false teeth.

"See! See! See!" cried little Patience, pattering up to the old woman with the tugging balloon.

"Where'd you get the money, Lydia? Baby's milk's in the cup on the kitchen table. Your father's home. You'd better get the steak. He complains so about it when I don't."

Lydia left the baby clinging to Lissie's skirts and went on into the kitchen. Her father was washing his hands at the sink.

"Hello, dad!" she said. The child had a peculiar thread of richness in her voice when she spoke to little Patience, and it was apparent again as she greeted the man at the sink. He turned toward her.

"Well, young woman, it's about time you got home. He said, 'Baby all right!'"

Lydia nodded and turned toward the kitchen table. Amos Dudley at this time was about forty years old—a thin man of medium weight, his brown hair already gray at the temples. Lydia evidently got from him the blue eyes and the white of her teeth. He began to peel off a pair of brown overalls.

"What's for supper?" he asked. "Round steak," said Lydia. "For heaven's sake, don't let Lissie touch it."

"I won't," said the child, piling up dishes deftly.

"I'm going to give baby her cupful of milk, and then I'll fix it in my patent way."

Amos nodded. "You're a natural cook, like your mother." He paused, one leg of his overalls off, disclosing his shiny black trousers. Lydia carried the cupful of milk toward the dining room. From where he sat he could see her kneel before little Patience, and hold the cup, while the baby drank thirstily. Little notes of the sunset light danced on the two curly golden heads. He looked from the children toward the dusty kitchen table.

"What a h-l of a mess Lissie does keep going," he muttered. "Patience would break her heart, if she knew. Oh! Patience, Patience!"

Lydia came back with the empty cup. "Now for the steak," she exclaimed. "Gosh, what a fire!"

She attacked the greasy stove with enthusiasm and in a short time a saucer-smell of steak filled the house. Amos went into the dining room and sat in a rocking chair with little Patience and the balloon in his lap.

"Where'd she get the balloon?" asked Amos as Lydia brought in the platter of meat.

"Margery gave it to her," answered the child. "Supper's ready."

"Got it at the circus, I suppose. I wish I could let you go, Lydia, but at a dollar and a half a day, I swan!"

"I didn't want to go," returned Lydia, setting the baby in her high chair. "I'm getting too big for circus."

"Too big for a circus?" Her father looked at her with understanding eyes. "I guess heaven is paved with lies like yours, Lydia. John Levine was by over tonight. Get some of the news dug out of the parlor, will you, Lissie?"

"Sure," said Lissie, good-naturedly. Lydia sat opposite her father and poured tea. The ancient maid of all work sat beside Patience and dispensed the currant sauce and the cake.

The baby was half asleep before the meal was ended. "She didn't nash her nap this afternoon," said

Lydia. "I'll take her up to bed now and finish my cake afterward."

The little sisters slept together in a mantel-ceilinged bedroom. Here again was dust and disorder, the floor covered with clothing and toys, the bed unmade, the old-fashioned mahogany bureau piled high with books, brushes, and soiled tea-cups that had held the baby's milk.

There was still light enough to see by. Lydia stood Patience on the bed and got her into her nightdress after gently persuading the baby to let her fasten the balloon to the foot of the bed. Then she carried her to the little rocker by the window and with a look that was the very essence of motherhood began to rock the two-year-old to sleep. Presently there floated down to Amos, smoking his pipe on the front-steps, Lydia's childish, throaty contralto:

"I've reached the land of corn and wine. I've reached that beautiful shining shore. My heaven, my home, forevermore."

The coolness of the August wind touched Amos' face. "Oh! Patience, Patience!" he murmured.

Lydia sat for a moment or two with the sleeping baby in her arms, looking down on her with a curious gentle intensity. Then she rose carefully, and as carefully deposited little Patience on the bed. This done, she untied the balloon and carried it out with her to the little landing. "There was a window here into which the August moon was beginning to shine. Lydia sat down with the balloon and felt of it carefully.

"Aren't balloons the most wonderful things—almost as wonderful as babies," she murmured. "I love the smell of them. Think what they can do, how they can float, better than birds! How you want to squeeze them but you don't want to! I'd rather have gone to the circus than to heaven."

In a moment she heard steps and greetings and her father leading his friend into the house. Then she slipped down the stairs and into the night. A dozen times she ran up and down the yard, the balloon like a fettered bird tugging at her wrist.

"I love it as much as little Patience does," she murmured. "Oh, I wish it was mine."

Finally, she ran out of the gate and up the street to the one house of which the street boasted. She stole up to the door and fastened the string of the balloon to the door bell, gave the bell a jerk and fled.

"Well, I haven't anything pleasant at all to look forward to now," she thought. "The circus parade is over and I've returned the balloon. Gee, yes, there is too! I didn't eat my cake yet!"

She turned up the lamp in the kitchen and forged in the cake box, bringing out the cake Lissie had saved for her. With this in her hand she entered the living room. An extraordinary long thin man was stretched out in one armchair. Amos in the other.

"You ought to sit in the parlor," said Lydia, reproachfully. "It's too stuffy," said Amos.

"Oh, hello, young Lydia!" said the tall man. "Come here and let me look at you."

Lydia drew the child to his knee, gave her a quick affectionate gaze on his thin, well-shaven face, and into his tired black eyes.

"Why do you always say young Lydia?" asked the child.

"Because I want to know, too," agreed Amos.

"Because, by heck! she's so young to be such an old lady. He smoothed the short curly hair with a gesture that was indescribably gentle. "I tell you what, young Lydia, if you were ten years older and I were ten years younger—"

Lydia leaned against his knee and took a large bite of cake. "You'd take me traveling, wouldn't you, Mr. Levine?" she said, comfortably.

"You bet I would, and you should have your heart's desire, whatever that might be. If any one deserves it, you do, young Lydia."

Amos nodded and Lydia looked at them both with a sort of puzzled content as she munched her cake.

"I brought a newly illustrated copy of 'Tom Sawyer' for you to see, Lydia," said Levine. "Keep it, as long as you want to. It's over on the couch there."

Lydia threw herself headlong on the book and the two men returned to the conversation she had interrupted.

A loan from Marshall comes due in January," said Amos. "My lord, I've got to do something."

"He's a skin, Marshall is. Why does he live on this street except to save money?"

Amos nodded. "He's a skin, Marshall is. Why does he live on this street except to save money?"

Farm Bureau Notes

R. D. Bailey, Co. Agricultural Agent.

"Every land owner should adopt for his land a system of farming that is permanent—a system under which the land becomes better rather than poorer."—Cyril G. Hopkins.

Sow Rye Early
Week in September is the right time to sow rye in Crawford County.

Soil should have been well tilled before that time. Rye should be sown, instead of the common kinds, which are badly run out.

Two sacks of acid phosphate per acre would give a large increase of straw as well of grain for those farmers who raise rye for grain.

Pays to do these things right. Makes a big difference in yields.

Those who are sowing rye for green manure next spring could omit the phosphate.

A farmer remarked to the County Agent today: "There are not enough farmers in the county plowing under green stuff." The agent said: "Right you are."

It is a wonder that the long-suffering land has stood up under the "take-off, take-off" policy as long as it has.

Why can't more farmers begin to do some of these simple things right?

State Fair

State Fair in Detroit September 3 to 11. Can you go?

National Dairy Show

Will be held on State Fair grounds in Detroit October 6 to 13. You are one of the people in our county who would greatly appreciate this wonderful exhibition.

This National Dairy show has never been held in Michigan before, and probably will never be again, as it is planned to house it permanently in Chicago, hereafter. It will pay you to go.

At least 25 Crawford county farmers should attend the National Dairy show sometime from October 6 to 13. See how you can improve your work that they cannot break into the dairy routine to go.

This show is all dairy show, and a huge show of cows. Here a farmer will find his ideals of cows, and dairy farming immensely raised.

The best cow in the United States will be there. All dairy breeds will be represented. Don't expect to find beef cattle on exhibition.

Dairymen is the great hope of Crawford county farmers, for dairymen allows us to sell our crops, yet keep them on the land for improvement of fertility.

This dairymen should be done, by us, with better, far better cows. These cows should be fed better. They should be housed better.

Those of us who attend the National Dairy show in Detroit will feel now pride in dairymen. We will get new ideas of how to manage dairymen, and of how good cows should look.

Plan to Go

You should leave Grayling, Grayling or Roscommon on the train at dinner, arrive in Detroit at bed time, get a good rest, get an early start next morning, and put in a long day at the Dairy show, and take the train home that evening. A two-day stay there would be better, while you have your fare paid.

Reduced rates for round-trip tickets.

Going to Take 50

The County Agent of Otsego county says he is "going to take 50 farmers down to the Dairy show."

Are we always going to play second fiddle in everything? You will be proud all your life to be able to say: "I was there, too."

Feeds Her Well

A farmer told me today that it pays him to feed his cow a gallon of bran night and morning, even though she is on pasture.

We could name three others who feed grain to cows on pasture. This good practice is spreading.

Enthusiastic

Those who feed cows, heifers and growing calves alfalfa are loud in praise of this best kind of hay. Notice they nor the stock are willing to go back to the old kinds of hay.

Double Barreled

While improving the stock, alfalfa improves the soil.

A hundred pounds of alfalfa hay contains exactly the same amount of protein (11 pounds) as a hundred pound bag of bran.

Feeding alfalfa allows you to cut down on grain.

You Can Grow It

Don't think that yours is some kind of a special farm on which alfalfa cannot be grown. We can grow it on any farm in the county. We have it now in ALL Parts of the county, and there is going to be MORE of it.

It's a Stayer

Once properly put in, it will last years and years, offering two cuttings a year.

Surely there is not a man in the county who lacks the sand to try five to ten acres next spring.

The Way to Do

Preparation for next spring's alfalfa sowing should be made NOW. Land cleaned up, ready for the time to be put on THIS FALL.

Some should, at once, sow vetch and rye to plow under late next spring, to fertilize the soil for alfalfa. Those who now have fields of alfalfa should get it cut for the last time this fall by the end of the FIRST WEEK in September.

As soon as off the field, it should be dragged north and south, then east and west, with a spring-tooth drag, on fields two years or more old. This keeps down June grass. June grass is what shortens the life of alfalfa fields.

Each thorough dragging gives the field an extra year to live.

As soon as dragged, the field should be top-dressed with stable manure, dusted on fine.

United States Average

Alfalfa has been found to be so good that its acreage in the United States doubled in ten years.

Average yield, throughout the United States:

Alfalfa hay, 4,372 lbs. per acre.

Clover hay, 2,624 lbs. per acre.

Timothy hay, 2,340 lbs. per acre.

In Michigan

In this state it has been found so far ahead of other hay, that, in just a few years, alfalfa acreage has jumped from 70 thousand acres to 500 thousand acres.

High Testimony

Henry's great book, "Feeds and Feeding," the standard book of the United States on feeds and feeding, says: "Due to its richness both in protein and mineral matter, especially lime, and because of its palatability to all classes of stock, and its beneficial nutritive effect, alfalfa hay has no superior in the list of roughages."

It is highly esteemed for feeding dairy cows, which need an abundance of protein and lime for milk production, and commonly commands a considerably higher price than clover hay.

"Alfalfa hay is unexcelled for breeding cattle, sheep and young stock." Breeding cows can be wintered in good condition without grain, on alfalfa hay, preferably with silage in addition.

It is extremely valuable for brood sows in winter. Even for fattening pigs a limited amount of alfalfa hay is sometimes economical. This pasture is the foundation of cheap pork production on thousands of farms.

FAIR VISITORS WILL CAMP IN STATE PARKS

Michigan state parks, near Detroit will be used as camp grounds by many of those who drive to the State Fair at Detroit from September 5 to 11, according to P. J. Hoffmaster, superintendent of parks.

Those who tour to Detroit for the fair, and who wish to camp out on the trip, will find the parks of great convenience. Several of them are within driving distance of an hour or so from the fair grounds.

Among the state parks within easy reach of Detroit are: Island Lake State Park, near Brighton on M-16; Dodge Brothers State Park, one-half mile off Woodward Ave., near Birmingham; Bloomer State Park No. 2, one and one-half miles southeast of Rochester, at the head of John R. street; Dodge Brothers State Park, six miles south of Utica, near Gratiot avenue.

SPECIAL DAYS MARK STATE FAIR PROGRAM

Special days, on each of which added attention will be given to the groups honored on that day, have been designated for the State Fair.

All of the entertainment and educational program of the big exposition with, of course, run right through the week, but extra features will be planned for the special days.

Monday, September 6, is to be Labor Day; Tuesday, Children's Day; Wednesday, Fraternal Day; Thursday, Farmers' Day; Friday, Detroit Day; and Saturday, Automobile Day. Big time horse races are booked for afternoons from Monday through Friday, with brilliant A. A. A. automobile racing on Saturday afternoon, September 11, the last day of the fair.

NOTES OF THE STATE FAIR

The 1926 Michigan State Fair will be the 77th in the history of the great state exposition.

The first Michigan State Fair was held in 1849. It has been held annually since, with the single exception of 1893.

PRESIDENT CALLES WILL ENFORCE LAW

Mexico's Chief Executive Refuses to Yield to Demands of Catholics.

Mexico City.—Coincident with the opening of congress, to which the Catholic episcopate is appealing for modification of the religious clauses of the constitution, both President Calles and the episcopate again have reiterated the unalterableness of their respective positions.

Each has charged the other with responsibility for the situation.

In his message to congress a few days ago President Calles said that the rebellious attitude of the clergy had forced him to issue the religious regulations. He announced that he intended to proceed firmly along the path he had chosen.

The episcopate issued a statement saying that congressional relief was most doubtful, but that it was appealing to the legislators to aid its cause, as the only other course open was a religious war.

The episcopate also announced that it would submit its bill for modification. As the President must approve measures congress passes, even if congress modifies the present regulations, that decision on the question rests with him.

Since enforcement of the religious laws, the President said, 42 churches, 73 convents and 7 centers of religious propaganda had been closed and 85 foreign priests had abandoned the country for violations of the law.

The message added that for 60 years the religious clauses had been in the constitution, but had not been enforced owing to revolutions and other incidents. There had been no persecutions of priests, he said, and that alarm was unjustified.

The episcopate's statement says:

"We believe our specific attitude, although energetic and firm, has taught a lesson to those who believe all conflicts should be settled by the use of arms and revolutions. We have given all the world an example of how tyranny should be opposed and how to fight for liberty."

The religious question, labor legislation, and a constitutional amendment, one effect of which might be to permit Gen. Alvaro Obregon again to assume the presidency of Mexico, are among the subjects to be discussed by the congress.

The constitution of 1917 provides that "the President will remain in power four years, and may never be re-elected." This clause was passed in 1910-20, the time of the overthrow of Porfirio Diaz, who virtually had become dictator of Mexico.

Many friends of General Obregon, who was President immediately preceding Calles, want him again as President when Calles' term expires in December, 1928.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

Postmaster General New has announced that the Seattle-Portland-San Francisco-Los Angeles air mail service would be inaugurated September 15.

To guard against possible accidents, two armored trucks have been placed in service between the bureau of engraving and printing and the treasury. They carry approximately $10,000 in currency each day.

Figures made public by the bureau of interior revenue show that tax collections during July, the first full month in which all provisions of the new revenue act were in effect, were $104,369,065, a decrease of $21,407,594 from July of 1925.

The monthly price index just issued by the Department of Agriculture shows that farm prices in July reached the lowest level in almost two years. Dairy products gained a point, but the purchasing power of grains, fruits, vegetables, cotton and cotton seed declined.

Japs Are Poor Marksmen; Could Not Hit Warships

Tokyo.—Recent night firing practice conducted by the Japanese navy in Bungo channel with two scrapped cruisers, the Hatsu Hara and the Yayoi, as targets was a failure. The battleships Nagato and Yamashiro, 10,000 meters distant, bombarded the cruisers for two hours without hitting them. The range was reduced to 7,000 meters and the cruisers maintained a steady fire, with like failures.

Eight Killed in Collision

Monroe, Mich.—Eight were killed in a head-on collision of two Detroit, Monroe & Toledo Shore line inter-urban cars near here. Additions to the list of dead are feared from the list of 26 injured.

Building Cut to 33 Stories

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The proposed cathedral of learning of the University of Pittsburgh will be 33 stories high instead of the 62 originally planned, revised plans for the structure have revealed.

60 Killed in R. R. Wreck

Barcelona, Spain.—Twenty-four passengers, all Spaniards, and the entire train crew were killed, and about 50 injured when a mail train bound for Valencia was wrecked.

Dice Used in Old Greece

Dice were known in ancient Greece, and their invention is attributed by some to Psalmedes in the Thirteenth century, D. C. The dice exhumed from Thebes differ in no way from the ivory or bone cubes of today. They had spots ranging from one to six on them and the sum of the spots on the two opposite sides was always seven.

Michigan Happenings

Reduction in telephone rates on certain classes of calls have been announced by the Michigan public utilities commission, the most important change being the advancement of the time of beginning of the evening rate to seven o'clock. It has been effective in the past after 8:30 p. m. The new rates become effective October 1. The order also makes provision for the reversal of charges on station to station calls where the amount of the charge is more than 25 cents.

An epidemic of jail breaking current in southern Michigan almost took an acute form in the county-bastille at Jackson when Sheriff Warren C. Stoddard found two bars sawed in two in a cell block on the second floor and two other bars to a window that led to the outside almost severed. As a result eight men are held in solitary confinement while an investigation is being made of the attempted wholesale delivery.

Blinded by a swarm of bees which at a distance he mistook for a fox, but which came through the open windshield of his automobile, George Colbath, an Oscoda commercial fisherman, lost control of his car and it crashed into a cement culvert on M-10. Colbath and a companion became unconscious after the crash, but were revived when the bees began to sting them. Each was seriously cut by broken glass.

A joint municipal airplane landing field and municipal golf links will be among the projects to be taken up this fall by the Owosso chamber of commerce. There are several sites, available. Numerous planes are owned now, and there is one of the best golf courses in the state at the Owosso Country club. Many here have been bitten by the golf bug, but are unable to afford belonging to the Country club.

Scott, chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee to which a radio audience from station WRAC at Escanaba recently, Mr. Scott also declared that there is no possibility that the Government will license radio receivers.

George Lord, state tax commissioner, has issued a statement explaining how the $17,800,000 tax levy and the $2.31 tax rate fixed by the State Administrative Board would affect the various counties in the state. The rate is 13 cents less than that of last year, while the valuation of property in the state was increased approximately $345,000,000. The $17,800,000 levy is the same as last year.

The Nicholson Steamship Co. is establishing an automobile-carrying boat line between Grand Haven and Milwaukee. A. R. Nichols, of Detroit, representative of the company, was at Grand Rapids recently to complete arrangements. It is planned to operate a boat, with a capacity of 100 cars a day, on a round trip to Milwaukee.

Severe burns on his back were suffered by William Norton, 83 years old, Lakewood, when in preparing to bathe, he slipped in the empty tub and opened the hot water faucet. Bank directors of Ann Arbor are considering changing the student checking account system to a method similar to that of travelers' checks. The change is being agitated by the retail merchants. If this system is adopted, it is explained, students will purchase checks from the bank and will not be able to use the regular checks as in the ordinary checking accounts. The position says that this method would assure the merchants that money had been deposited for the checks they accept.

On another page of this issue of the Avalanche appears a copy of the Republican primary election ballot. The names of the candidates in cases where there is a contest are so printed that each name will appear an equal number of times on the total number of ballots printed, as required by law. The reprinting of the ballot in the Avalanche will give our readers an opportunity to study it over before going to the polls. Three other party ballots will be on hand—Democratic, Prohibition and the Workers parties. There is no contest in any of the parties and those names on the ballot will doubtlessly be nominated. On the bottom of the Republican ballots appears a list of blank spaces in which may be written the names of those whom the voters may select as delegates to the county convention which will be held soon after the primary election. Those elected will be entitled, at the county convention, to elect a delegate to the state convention. Grayling township is to elect 11 county delegates, South Branch township, 3, and the others one each. Be sure to write the names in the blank space and also place a cross in each square before the name.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to hereby respectfully announce that I am a candidate for re-election as Sheriff.

I am serving my first term. I believe the people have been given a fair and square service by this department. I have tried to do my duty as I saw it, playing no favorites and only looking to justly protect the public in a sane and safe manner, just as a sheriff is supposed to do.

I trust that my actions have met your approval and will merit your votes again this year—election day, Tuesday, November 2nd.

J. E. BOBENMOYER.
